US Media: Data Tracker 1Q26

16 April 2026

This is our regular quarterly US Media Data Tracker product, which examines trends in viewership on TV, the most popular series/movies by streaming platform, catalogues, value for money, cable audiences, box office and sports viewership.

This report is intended solely for consumption by Can Cui

Key Insights From The Data

Netflix's Slate Still Looks Good But It Will Face Tough Comps in 2H26:

- Netflix's share of the Top-20 shows dropped from 46% to 40% even as viewership continued to grow (+14% yoy).
- While Netflix's share of releases is increasing in 2Q26 to 57%, it has only 40% of the Top-25 most-anticipated shows. Netflix is ramping production volumes to fill gaps. We reckon that its dominance in 4Q25 should not be extrapolated forward, even if Netflix held share over the past two years, as competition continues to rise with generally better-funded rivals.

WBD Continues to Win in Content Terms:

- WBD dominated MovieMeter rankings across all titles, and both TV shows and Movies in 1Q26, with The Pitt S2 emerging as a multi-season blockbuster. Its Top-20 viewership grew 84% this quarter. PSKY is buying a healthy studio.
- HBO Max launched in European markets driving it to #2 global streaming according to FlixPatrol.
- Combining WBD and Paramount creates a market with 4 main players (Disney, PSKY, Netflix, Amazon): What does Comcast do?

Content Production Is Ramping to Pre-Strike Levels; Competition Is Rising Once Again:

- Titles in production accelerated in 1Q26 with the sector approaching the '23, pre-strike, peak production.
- Paramount and WBD are lowering production as they get ready to merge.
- With increasing margins, continued revenue growth and improved balance sheets, the threat of heightened competitive intensity is a real risk, in our view.

Nielsen's Measurement Changes Implies More Growth Ahead for Streaming:

- Nielsen changed its panel sources and technology, delaying The Gauge data for March. According to the WSJ, the new measures put streaming share 6ppts lower (now 42%).
- This creates issues in the future for yoy comps and makes linear ratings hard to extrapolate from. Notably, Fox seems to have faced a tough comp and a sizeable ratings decline even with the boost to linear viewing from the methodology change.

F1 Transition to Apple TV Had Higher Opener Viewing; Step Change in TKO's UFC Viewing With PSKY:

- Australian GP US viewing above ESPN levels for the season opener. With Bahrain/Saudi cancelled, next test will be Miami GP, which is expected to be Apple's first FTA race, competing with ABC broadcast last year. Jury out on new F1 regs. viewing impact.
- UFC's CBS/Paramount+ debut brought a step-change in US viewership – ~5m avg. for numbered events vs. 1.5-2m EPSN PPVs.

Stock Take-Aways

Alphabet – BUY	YouTube share gains continued to stall even if reaching ATHs in viewership.
Amazon – BUY	Prime Video continues to outspend the competition and make in-roads in terms of hits.
Apple – BUY	Apple TV continues to apply the HBO playbook.
Comcast – SELL	Peacock gained 218bps of streaming share in February (likely NFL/Olympics driven) but structurally will have to find a solution beyond sports rights. Super Mario Galaxy was the box office hit of the quarter (>$600M on $100M budget).
Fox Corporation – BUY	Tubi's growth appears to have stalled for now. Fox News had a tough comp in 1Q26.
Formula One Group – BUY	Apple seems to be driving engagement growth for F1. Ticket prices increased above inflation. Attendance up +9% in 1Q26.
Netflix – Buy	Stranger Things final season carried another quarter for Netflix, but the pipeline now looks thinner, with management compensating via catalogue expansion.
Paramount Skydance – NEUTRAL	Sequentially worse quarter for Paramount+. Also a weak Box Office.
Roku – BUY	Roku channel continues to grow.
Sony Group – BUY	Looking like '26 on track to be a great year for the Pictures division with a strong slate.
The Walt Disney Company – SELL	Disney+ was down 7% and Hulu down 60% in Top-20 viewership yoy. Disney+ and Hulu are starting to ramp their catalogues once again.
TKO Group Holdings – NEUTRAL	UFC's CBS/Paramount+ debut brought a step-change in domestic viewership — ~5m average for numbered events vs. estimated 1.5-2m PPVs during the ESPN era.
Versant Media - SELL	Versant hard to extrapolate from Nielsen data given viewership metric changes. Rating benefited from Winter Olympics although limited economic effect (space rented by Comcast).
Warner Bros. Discovery - Neutral	The content winner in 1Q26, topping MovieMeter rankings in all categories. HBO Max grew 84% yoy in Top-20 viewership and now offers the best cost-per-hit at its price point. Launch in the UK, Germany, Italy resulted in #2 global streaming service per FlixPatrol data.

- Neilsen's methodology is changing with adjustment to panel demographics and technology, expected to increase the recorded linear audience by 6ppts rel. to streaming (WSJ, Mar. '26). Data for Mar. '26 has been delayed and is not included in our report.
- The available data up until Feb. '26 is still based on Nielsen's old methodology, hence lfl comparisons are still valid.
- Cable declines accelerated on a yoy basis in both Jan. and Feb. '26.
- Broadcast grew 1% yoy in Feb. after declining 9% in Jan., averaging LSD declines despite the Winter Olympics, pointing to a probable worsening of decline vs. -3% in the prior year.
- Streaming grew 5% in Jan. and 9% in Feb. These are much lower growth rates than seen in the corresponding month in '24 and '25.
- Overall TV viewership was down 5% in Jan. and 1% in Feb.

- Netflix had a mega-hit with the last season of Stranger Things, topping the charts for two quarters in a row. However, Netflix only had 6 exclusives in the Top-20 vs. 9 in the prior quarter.
- The remainder of viewing was fragmented, although notably early data for 15 episode The Pitt S2 is suggesting that it may turn into a valuable broadcast-like show for Warner Bros Television, given that the premiere was up >200% vs. last season.

- HBO Max now looks like the most competitive streamer when factoring cost per hit and hit rate (Arete Score, lower = better).
- Netflix continues to retain an absolute advantage measured in consumer cost per hit, even taking into account the Mar. '26 US price rises.
- Combining WBD and Paramount+ with the proposed merger of PSKY and WBD matches the Disney Bundle in scale terms, and creates a more consolidated market dominated by three large streamers + Prime Video.
- Peacock looks like the laggard and seems like it still needs to work on long-term streaming viability beyond bunding sports rights, which we do not see as a sustainable source of competitive advantage.

- Netflix and YouTube lost share to Peacock, likely due to Peacock showing both the NFL Super Bowl and Winter Olympics this quarter.
- Other player shares were relatively stable in the quarter.
- In absolute terms, all platforms reached new highs, aside from Paramount, which had a very difficult 1Q25 comp.
- Roku and YouTube continue to grow viewership the fastest yoy.

- Peacock/Paramount continued to reduce their catalogues, presumably making way for sports.
- Disney+ had a slight catalogue increase, while Hulu declined.
- Amazon and Apple TV both grew their catalogues at an above market rate.
- Netflix accelerated catalogue growth during the quarter, presumably to try to offset very difficult yoy slate comps in 2H26 (Stranger Things final series, Squid Game S3, Knives Out 3, etc., in '25).
- Other platforms' catalogues tended to be relatively stable.

Japanese GP Viewership Mixed in Europe

Source: European media outlets, Formula1 God and thejudge13.com.

- Australian GP US viewership figures suggests that concerns around the potential for lower engagement on Apple TV were misplaced:
  - Apple's Eddy Cue confirmed that Apple's opening race viewership exceeded ESPN's 1.1m viewership (Nielsen).
  - Both '25 and '26 Australian GPs were "season openers" and so seem to us like a fair lfl comparison.
  - Apple TV seems to be supporting US engagement growth vs. concerns about F1 races going behind Apple's paywall.
- Expect the Miami GP (4 May) to be the first "free-to-air" race on Apple TV, likely heavily marketed, and providing the first comparison vs. ABC broadcast viewership last season.
- Recent media reports (e.g., gpfans.com) suggest that European viewership has been "mixed" given the new regulations (e.g., Japan GP – lower chart).
- Too early to judge the impact of new regulations on viewership, given the planned regs evolution over the season. There have more overtakes, but fans are critical of battery deployment vs. driver skill overtaking ("Mario Kart racing"), with notable driver dissatisfaction (e.g., Verstappen). Key also will be whether Mercedes dominates the field.
- From an economic perspective, there is plenty of time for F1 to respond with regs adjustments given 5-7 years of contracted revenues.
- Iran conflict resulted in cancellation of Bahrain and Saudi GPs.

- UFC viewership is off to a strong start on CBS/Paramount+ for its new 7-year $1.1bn AAV rights agreement – this points to meaningful sponsorship opportunity for UFC on higher domestic viewership.
- Paramount reported 4.96m average viewership for its debut numbered fight event (UFC 324) on Paramount+ (n.b., Paramount+ has dropped PPV for numbered events in the US).
- This viewership across US and Latin America is broadly comparable with "behind PPV paywall" global viewership for historic McGregor fights (UFC's highest viewership fighter historically), assuming 3.5 viewers per PPV for McGregor fights (averaging 1.5m PPVs/fight).
- With typical PPVs <500k in the ESPN era (= 1.5-2m domestic), we think this points to a significant step-up for main card numbered event viewership in the US.
- Expect viewership to taper/normalise slightly from the debut night, as we saw with WWE's Monday Night Raw on Netflix.
- CBS "prelims" viewership looks similarly strong on debut – UFC 326 prelims on CBS averaged ~2.5m viewership in US, comparable with ESPN's Apr. '24 high for UFC 300, which was broadcast across ESPN, ESPN+ and Hulu SVOD.
- Lower table shows Live Events revenue trends in 1Q26. Expecting stable attendance for numbered events but slightly weaker ticket pricing. The resulting low-teens decline implied for Live Events revenue is also reflected in consensus.

1Q Friday Night Smackdown Viewership (millions)

Source: Nielsen, USA Network, Wrestlenomics.

- Monday Night Raw premiered on Netflix on 6 Jan. '25, having previously aired on USA Network.
- After a strong 1Q25 (1.9m average US viewership), Netflix Raw viewership trended lower, settling at ~1.5m per show, broadly consistent with prior cable viewership.
- Can access global household viewership when Raw hits a Top 10 Netflix ranking:
  - Global Raw viewership fell ~10% yoy in 1Q26.
  - Only 4 Raw shows made the Top-10 vs. 12 in 1Q25.
- Lower chart shows Friday Night Smackdown* viewership on USA Network.
  - Smackdown viewership grew 12.5% yoy in 1Q26.
  - Remains structurally lower than it was on Fox Sports in 1Q24.

How Are Cable Audiences Trending?

Quarterly Cable Audience by MediaCo (Average Qly Audience, Prime Time, P2+ Viewers 000s)

Source: USTVDB, Arete Research.

- While Neilsen didn't adjust their streaming data, they did adjust linear data for the new panel demographics and technology. This resulted in a sizeable increase in stated linear viewing, which cannot be adjusted in the orange historical data in the chart above.
- Hard to take too much from this data, other than it is wrong to assume that, for example, Versant's rating was +12% yoy ! Worth noting that while Versant viewership benefited from the Winter Olympics, Comcast retained the bulk of the Olympics economics, simply renting space on USA Network.
- Worth noting that Fox seems to have had a weak quarter (-9% on non-lfl data) given a difficult post-election comp in 1Q25.
- Market share variations between the cable networks looked relatively minor in the scheme of historical data.

4Q25 WW Gross vs. Budget by Distributor

Source: IMDB, The Numbers, Arete Research estimates.

- North American Box Office receipts were up +25% yoy in 1Q26. This was despite a weak slate from majors as independent studios picked up the slack.
- This quarter was a good quarter for Comcast, driven by Super Mario Galaxy grossing >$600m so far against a $100m budget.
- Overall, Box Office is performing above expectations driven by independent Studios and Comcast having the only hit movie, and likely a profitable quarter.

- We increase our price target for Netflix to $116 in '26E (previously $110) as a result of factoring-in late-March price increases, currency impact, and other minor estimate adjustments. Our price target is based on a 50/50 blend of multiples (average of forward multiples in '27E – 27.5x P/E, 30x P/FCF, 22.5x EV/EBITDA – discounted back to YE'26E) and DCF (WACC 8.5%/PGR 3%).

- We increase our price target for Versant to $36 in '27E (previously $33) as a result of factoring in 4Q25 results. Our price target remains based on 3.5x EV/EBITDA in '27E, less net debt in '27E, divided by YE27E share count assuming buybacks.

Key Insights From The Data

Netflix's Slate Still Looks Good But It Will Face Tough Comps in 2H26:

- Netflix's share of the Top-20 shows dropped from 46% to 40% even as viewership continued to grow (+14% yoy).
- While Netflix's share of releases is increasing in 2Q26 to 57%, it has only 40% of the Top-25 most-anticipated shows. Netflix is ramping production volumes to fill gaps. We reckon that its dominance in 4Q25 should not be extrapolated forward, even if Netflix held share over the past two years, as competition continues to rise with generally better-funded rivals.

WBD Continues to Win in Content Terms:

- WBD dominated MovieMeter rankings across all titles, and both TV shows and Movies in 1Q26, with The Pitt S2 emerging as a multi-season blockbuster. Its Top-20 viewership grew 84% this quarter. PSKY is buying a healthy studio.
- HBO Max launched in European markets driving it to #2 global streaming according to FlixPatrol.
- Combining WBD and Paramount creates a market with 4 main players (Disney, PSKY, Netflix, Amazon): What does Comcast do?

Content Production Is Ramping to Pre-Strike Levels; Competition Is Rising Once Again:

- Titles in production accelerated in 1Q26 with the sector approaching the '23, pre-strike, peak production.
- Paramount and WBD are lowering production as they get ready to merge.
- With increasing margins, continued revenue growth and improved balance sheets, the threat of heightened competitive intensity is a real risk, in our view.

Nielsen's Measurement Changes Implies More Growth Ahead for Streaming:

- Nielsen changed its panel sources and technology, delaying The Gauge data for March. According to the WSJ, the new measures put streaming share 6ppts lower (now 42%).
- This creates issues in the future for yoy comps and makes linear ratings hard to extrapolate from. Notably, Fox seems to have faced a tough comp and a sizeable ratings decline even with the boost to linear viewing from the methodology change.

F1 Transition to Apple TV Had Higher Opener Viewing; Step Change in TKO's UFC Viewing With PSKY:

- Australian GP US viewing above ESPN levels for the season opener. With Bahrain/Saudi cancelled, next test will be Miami GP, which is expected to be Apple's first FTA race, competing with ABC broadcast last year. Jury out on new F1 regs. viewing impact.
- UFC's CBS/Paramount+ debut brought a step-change in US viewership – ~5m avg. for numbered events vs. 1.5-2m EPSN PPVs.

Stock Take-Aways

Alphabet – BUY	YouTube share gains continued to stall even if reaching ATHs in viewership.
Amazon – BUY	Prime Video continues to outspend the competition and make in-roads in terms of hits.
Apple – BUY	Apple TV continues to apply the HBO playbook.
Comcast – SELL	Peacock gained 218bps of streaming share in February (likely NFL/Olympics driven) but structurally will have to find a solution beyond sports rights. Super Mario Galaxy was the box office hit of the quarter (>$600M on $100M budget).
Fox Corporation – BUY	Tubi's growth appears to have stalled for now. Fox News had a tough comp in 1Q26.
Formula One Group – BUY	Apple seems to be driving engagement growth for F1. Ticket prices increased above inflation. Attendance up +9% in 1Q26.
Netflix – Buy	Stranger Things final season carried another quarter for Netflix, but the pipeline now looks thinner, with management compensating via catalogue expansion.
Paramount Skydance – NEUTRAL	Sequentially worse quarter for Paramount+. Also a weak Box Office.
Roku – BUY	Roku channel continues to grow.
Sony Group – BUY	Looking like '26 on track to be a great year for the Pictures division with a strong slate.
The Walt Disney Company – SELL	Disney+ was down 7% and Hulu down 60% in Top-20 viewership yoy. Disney+ and Hulu are starting to ramp their catalogues once again.
TKO Group Holdings – NEUTRAL	UFC's CBS/Paramount+ debut brought a step-change in domestic viewership — ~5m average for numbered events vs. estimated 1.5-2m PPVs during the ESPN era.
Versant Media - SELL	Versant hard to extrapolate from Nielsen data given viewership metric changes. Rating benefited from Winter Olympics although limited economic effect (space rented by Comcast).
Warner Bros. Discovery - Neutral	The content winner in 1Q26, topping MovieMeter rankings in all categories. HBO Max grew 84% yoy in Top-20 viewership and now offers the best cost-per-hit at its price point. Launch in the UK, Germany, Italy resulted in #2 global streaming service per FlixPatrol data.

Sector Risks. The telecoms and cable industries are competitive and regulated, as well as impacted by political and antitrust decisions. In Europe, this is a mature industry often characterized by declining revenues in both wireline and wireless, which companies attempt to offset by cost reduction. In the US, competition is rising in wireless and broadband as the industry matures, while cord-cutting and streaming are disrupting the video business, increasing uncertainty over financial performance. Emerging market telecoms are also in a maturing phase. Large telecoms and cable companies are often sprawling groups, and in some cases poorly-managed. Technological change and the entry of other over-the-top players into telecoms markets are additional factors leading to uncertainty over the industry's financial results. The US media industry is characterised by changing consumer behaviour with traditional linear TV and theatrical consumption being replaced new streaming models. These streaming businesses are typically global and often require heavy investment, and so far producing lower returns than was historically the case in the linear TV era. There has been a race to build new streaming content at significant expense, while consumers seem to churn between streamers chasing the shows/movies of the moment; making for a competitive industry. This streaming investment and competition adds to financial performances risks and raises the level of capital needed to be successful.

Rating System: Buy (B), Neutral (N) and Sell (S) – A Buy-rated stock is projected to outperform the analyst's industry coverage universe and rise in price over the next 12 months. A Neutral-rated stock is projected to perform in line with the analyst's industry coverage universe over the next 12 months. A Sell-rated stock is projected to underperform the analyst's industry coverage universe and decline in price over the next 12 months. Being assigned a Buy or Sell rating is determined by a stock's absolute return potential, related investment risks and other factors, which may include share liquidity, debt refinancing, estimate risk, economic outlook of principal countries of operation, or other company, political, regulatory, competitive, technological or industry considerations. A stock's absolute return potential represents the difference between the current stock price and the target price over a period as defined by the analyst, and may also include dividends or other forms of capital return forecast due to be paid over the target price period, if the analyst considers that they may be material.
